Woman as Man Seen Her.

A St. Louis man who is fond of commenting on the idiosyncrasies of the opposite sex says that:

"One of the funniest ways adopted by womankind for holding gowns clear of the elevated steps is to pick up the back breadth so high that the second ruffle of the petticoat is catching cold, while the shoe tops glare in the broad daylight and one's feet walk straight up the front of one's skirts."

"This does look graceful from the back, but it is only a question of two steps, or maybe three, before the woman falls all over herself and wishes the hind had more senses. The girl who does this is the one who wishes always to make a picture of herself at any expense. After she had tripped up several times and exploded the palms of a new pair of gloves—or two or three or four—she finds that the best way to keep a skirt up in the front is not by lifting it up in the back."

INDIAN SIGNALS.

The Long Distance Code by the Red Men Conversed.

The traveler on the plains in ten days soon learned the significance of the spirals of smoke that he saw rising from a distant ridge and that in turn he might see ed from a different direction, the signal talk of the Indians miles of intervening ground, as used in rallying the warriors for attack or warning them of a when that seemed advisable.

The Indian had a way of sending the smoke in rings or puffs, so that such a smoke column was never noticed and understood signal and not taken for the smoke of some campfire. He made the covering the little fire with his hands for a moment and then smoking moving the bignket and allowing smoke to ascend, when he it covered the fire again. The ascending smoke rings said to the Indian within 30 miles: "Look! There is an enemy near!"

Two smoke columns were sent; the first smokes built close together meant danger. One smoke merely meant messenger. Two smokes meant "Come to this place." Travel the plains usefulness of this long distance phone will quickly become apparent.

Sometimes at night the traveler saw fiery lines cross sky, shooting up and falling, taking a direction diagonal to vision. He might guess they were the signals of Indians, but he was an old timer he might be able to interpret the signals. An old timer and the squaw man knew one fire arrow (an arrow projecting the head of the shaft gunpowder and fine bark) meant vice as the column of smoke said, "An enemy is near." Two meant "Danger." Three arrows imperatively, "This danger is Several arrows said, "The enemies too many for us." Two arrows into the air at once meant "Warning!" three at once shot off diagonal direction said as playing pointing a finger, "That way," the untutored savage could tell fairly well at night as well as time."

Now She Hates Him

A young man and a young woman lean over the front gate. They are late. It is moonlight. He is leaving, as the parting is the last about to go away. She is reluctant she him depart. They swing gate.

"I'll never forget you," he says if death should claim me I thought will be of you."

"I'll be true to you," she sobbed never see anybody else or love to long as I live."

They part.

Six years later he returns. His heart of former years has changed. They meet at a party. She has grown greatly. Between the dances recognition takes place.

"Let me see," she muses, while bantering a tattoo on her pretty cheek "was it your brother who was my old sweetheart?"

"Really I don't know," he says "Probably my father."—London Echo.

Peel Didn't Know Tennyson

Peel regarded all light literature triflers and poets with their unperturbed pursuits as the butterflies among human species. Carlyle had proclaimed to press Tennyson's claim a pension. The rival chairman Sheridan Knowles, the popular dramatist.

Peel consulted Milnes as to the which he ought to take, accompanied the appeal by the statement himself he knew absolutely neither of Mr. Tennyson or Mr. Knowles.

"What?" said Milnes. "Have never seen the name of Sheridan Knowles on a playbill?"

"No," replied Peel.

"And have you never read a poem by Tennyson?"

"No," was again the answer, accompanied by a request that Milnes let him see something which Tennyson had written. Accordingly Milnes led him to Sir Robert Peel the two poets "Locksley Hall" and "Ulysses."
